

As a parent, you are your child's primary educator and one of the school's essential teammate.

Creating an environment where your child can solidify his or her relationship with their learning journey is key. Adding a few decorations in French in your home, playing French music and having French books in the house will help add value to speaking French.

Exposing your children to French content will also help develop their vocabulary.

Listen when your child reads or plays in French and let him or her teach you what they've learned at school. These simple gestures will show your child that you are behind him or her and interested in their learning.

Together, practice saying the words in French:
